The Dragon Who Couldn't Breathe Fire

Liam was building a fort in his backyard when he heard a strange sneeze. "A-choo!" Something small and blue tumbled out of the bushes—a baby dragon with crumpled wings and a tail that drooped like a wilted flower.

"I'm Spark," the dragon sniffled. "And I'm the worst dragon ever." He opened his mouth, but instead of fire, only soap bubbles came out. Pop! Pop! Pop!

Every day after school, Liam tried to help Spark. They practiced with spicy chili peppers ("Maybe fire needs heat!") and spun in circles ("For dragon-dizzy power!"). But Spark only produced more bubbles—some heart-shaped, some as big as apples.

Then Liam noticed something: Spark's bubbles glowed at night, lighting up the whole backyard like floating lanterns.

One evening, a bad storm knocked out the town's electricity. Old Mrs. Martinez's dog, Taco, was lost in the dark woods! Spark flew ahead, his bubbles lighting the way like a trail of glowing breadcrumbs. Liam followed the bright path and found shivering Taco under a tree.
