I pulled my baseball cap down tight and adjusted my mitt. It was the last inning of our neighborhood game, and the base paths were full.

"You've got this, Eli!" yelled my teammate Maya from the dugout. "Keep your eye on the ball!"

I nodded, stepping up to home plate and taking a deep breath to calm the butterflies in my stomach. The pitcher wound up and threw the ball right down the middle.

CRACK!

The sound echoed across the park as the ball soared over the shortstop's head. "Run, Eli, run!" my whole team cheered.

I took off toward first base, a giant grin spreading across my face as I watched the ball drop into center field.
